

PRESS RELEASE:AccountMate Announces Eight Year Accounting Software Product Strategy

(February 7, 2013) (Petaluma, CA) AccountMate's commitment for all current and future accounting software product lines is to support them for a minimum of eight years. The first four years includes regular support plus an additional four years of extended support from the first ship date of each build and version.

David Dierke, President and CEO of AccountMate, affirms that "AccountMate's commitment to its reseller channel and their clients is to offer long term support of our ERP product lines. Our eight year support policy ensures users that they can count on taking full advantage of feature enhancements and support of all of our current and future products."

Currently, AccountMate has three source code modifiable product lines. AccountMate for SQL, AccountMate for Express and AccountMate for LAN that are all based on Microsoft's Visual FoxPro programming language. AccountMate Software has used this programming language since it was first introduced in 1995 and expects that its software products will continue to be viable solutions for the foreseeable future.

Ken Levy, President of MashupX, LLC and former Visual FoxPro Product Manager at Microsoft, says, "I've been following the implementation of AccountMate in-depth for over 10 years. I have complete confidence that AccountMate makes the most of the very stable Visual FoxPro development tool in the integration of their SQL and LAN products. And I have no doubt that the AccountMate applications could continue to be viable into the next decade as they are upgraded with FoxPro."

Tommy Tan, AccountMate's Chief Technology Officer, said "Our future direction is to continue to enhance the three current product lines as they are built on sound Visual FoxPro tools. A fourth product line is in development and will be built on Microsoft .NET." This increases AccountMate's product offerings to four sets of unique accounting solutions running in parallel.
